Consultation Summary

[session:9_1789747200]

[--- AI Summary - Sep 19, 2026 12:04 AM ---]

Chief Complaint

Cough for five days with recent yellowish sputum, fever, sore throat, nasal congestion, headache, and generalized weakness.

History of Present Illness

The patient reported that five days ago he developed a dry cough which progressed over the past two days to a productive cough with yellowish sputum. Yesterday night he experienced a fever of 38.2 °C that subsided after taking paracetamol. He also noted sore throat, nasal congestion, headache, and fatigue over the same period. He has a long-standing history of asthma, using a salbutamol inhaler twice the previous night for wheezing, and a history of hypertension. He took a cold medicine that also contained paracetamol in addition to a separate dose of paracetamol, raising concern for duplicate dosing. He reports an allergy to ibuprofen. Plan: monitor symptoms, avoid duplicate paracetamol, continue salbutamol PRN, and arrange follow-up.

Doctor's Assessment

The physician identified an acute upper respiratory infection with possible bronchitis and noted an asthma component. He emphasized the risk of inadvertent overdose from multiple agents containing paracetamol and confirmed the patient's ibuprofen allergy. He instructed the patient to monitor for worsening dyspnea, chest pain, or hemoptysis and to seek emergency care if these occur.

Diagnosis (if mentioned)

Not discussed.

Treatment Plan / Prescriptions

- Continue salbutamol inhaler as needed for wheezing or shortness of breath.
- Use paracetamol only as a single agent for fever/pain; avoid additional cold medicines that contain paracetamol.
- Avoid ibuprofen due to documented allergy.
- No new prescriptions were written.

Follow-up Instructions

The patient was advised to follow up for a repeat evaluation if symptoms improve or worsen, and to seek immediate emergency care if he develops severe breathing difficulty, chest pain, or coughs up blood. Not discussed.
